NISHIARAI DAISHI

西新井大師
Nishiarai-Daishi

Nishiarai-Daishi was built by Kukai (Kobo-Daishi) in 826 when he went through Nishiarai area during his journey and carved Eleven-Faced Goddess, the principal image, to save people. Nishiarai-Daishi is one of the three major Yakuyoke Daishi (warding off temple) in Kanto area which is famous for protection against bad luck and evils.

空海
Kukai

774-835. Kukai was a Japanese monk in the beginning of Heian period and the founder of Shingon "True Word" school of Buddhism. 86 years after he passed away, he was given the name "Kobo-Daishi" meaning The Grand Master Who Propagated the Buddhist Teaching by emperor Godaigo. He is the essential factor to understand Nishiarai-Daishi.

数珠
Zyuzu (Buddhist rosary)

Zyuzu is one of the Buddhist items and is essential at a funeral ceremony and for visiting someone's grave in Japan. Originally, to purify Bonnou, earthly desires and evil thoughts of human being, the number of beads had been 108 which is the same number of Bonnou, but nowadays informal version of 27 or 36 beads ones are common. Zyuzu made of power stones are also common among young people to wear it fashionably on their wrist as an amulet. You can be a Japan hand if you have a Zyuzu.

せんべい
Senbei (rice cracker)

"Senbei" is made from rice, the staple food loved by Japanese calling it "Gohan." After many processes such as beating in boiled water, kneading, steaming, and kneading again, dry the thin and round dough in the sun for 3-5 days. Finally, broil the dough over charcoal fire and season it with soy sauce. "Senbei" is a bit salty snack made by so much labor, time, and artisan skills that you cannot imagine from its simple look.

草だんご
Kusa-Dango (rice dumpling)

"Dango" is quite different from Senbei in terms of its shape, taste, and texture, but the ingredient is rice, same as Senbei. The processes to make Dango, beating in boil water, kneading, steaming are also same as Senbei except drying and broiling. After these processes, mix grinded Yomogi green leaf with the dough and finally add sweet Anko (red bean paste), which becomes the Nishiarai-Daishi's local specialty, "Kusa-Dango."

あんこ
Anko (sweet bean paste)

"Anko" is made from well-boiled red bean called Azuki. First, boil red beans with plenty of water until they get tender. Then add the same amount of sugar and simmer until water evaporates. Finally add little bit salt to bring out sweet taste more. "Anko" is like whip cream and custard cream for cakes, which means it is essential to Japanese sweets.

だるま
Daruma (tumbler doll)

Daruma is made with a wish from Japanese proverb "fall seven times and then rise eight times," no matter how many times you fail, rise again and live on your life, so this tumbler doll is designed to rise immediately by itself. Its eyes are not painted at first from a Japanese custom of letting people paint one eye when they make a wish, and if the wish is granted, add the other eye to complete the doll with gratitude. How about making a wish upon Daruma?
